From building a staff to a recruiting race that saw him cover the country, Paul Chryst’s first 50 days as Wisconsin’s head coach went by in a blur. Let him tell you all about it.

Chryst’s philosophy shapes recruiting

When outsiders marvel at Wisconsin’s ability to annually field a quality offensive line, regardless of its experience level, Paul Chryst suggested that there’s often the tendency to be flippant with the remark, “there must be something in the water” to explain the consistent results and success.

“You do hear people say that, but it’s not that easy, it’s not by accident, it doesn’t just happen,” said Chryst, UW’s first-year head coach. “We’ve been fortunate here to have a ton of great linemen for a long time and, when you look back, there have been a number of great offensive line coaches.

“Yet, I do feel really confident whether it’s with recruiting (offensive line prospects), or more importantly with the guys who are already here, that you can look them in the eye and tell them, ‘if you put the time in, if you work and work together with these coaches, great things can happen.”

The Badgers have landed three future building blocks/blockers in their 2015 recruiting class: Jon Dietzen, an early enrollee and 330-pound Cheesehead from Black Creek, a small village outside Green Bay; Kevin Estes from San Marcos, California, and David Moorman from Northville, Michigan.

As upperclassmen, Tyler Marz, Dan Voltz and Ray Ball will have a role in the mentoring process of the freshmen and the other returning O-linemen that will be counted on to fill the holes in the depth chart left by the graduation losses of starters Rob Havenstein, Kyle Costigan and Dallas Lewallen.

It’s hard to image a better learning environment for these players, young and old alike, than Joe Rudolph’s classroom/meeting room. Rudolph will serve as the offensive coordinator and coach the offensive line. Joining him will be grad assistant Josh Oglesby and quality control assistant Bill Nagy.

Rudolph and Oglesby were former All-Big Ten linemen for the Badgers, while Nagy was versatile enough to play multiple positions up front and ended up starting four games as a rookie with the Dallas Cowboys before an injury cut short his NFL career. Together, they represent a wealth of knowledge.

“We have tremendous resources because when you talk about those three guys, they’ve all done it (on the field) and done it at a high level,” said Chryst, who has worked on staffs with veteran technicians like Bob Bostad and Jim Hueber. “And Joe is as good of a teacher as I’ve been around.”

There are a number of familiar faces running around the UW football offices these days; former Badgers players who have returned to their college roots in a variety of capacities, ranging from old quarterbacks (Jon Budmayr), linebackers (Ethan Armstrong) and kicking specialists (Taylor Mehlhaff).

In balancing recruiting and assembling his coaching staff, Chryst pointed out that it all worked out for the best in terms of fostering some chemistry. “It was good for the guys (the assistants) to be able to roll up their sleeves and dive in and kind of attack this past month together,” he said.

“What better way to get to know the staff than evaluating film together or being on the road together and talking through scenarios. It was really good that way. And that part was fun. I certainly appreciated the effort of everyone because it was such a different year of recruiting.”

It was different or, at the very least, unique because of the prospects who had already verbally committed to the Badgers when Chryst replaced Gary Andersen.

“The strength in our recruiting is truly knowing not just who the player is but who the person is, and that takes time,” Chryst allowed.

But it was unavoidable, he conceded, and a hurdle that had to be cleared. And it was.

“We’re adding a group of guys who will add value to this team,” he said. “They can help you be better on the field. They can help you be better in the locker room. They can help you be better in the community.”

How then have the last three years impacted his recruiting approach? “Your seat is different,” he said of running his own program at Pitt. “But it reaffirmed the philosophy. It has reinforced a lot of things I’ve believed in. And I’m more confident in that philosophy than I probably was.”

To which, he added, “I always talk about knowing what and who Wisconsin is.”

Must be in the water, because a lot of people are believing in the same things since he returned.”
Signing Day success measured later on

I was talking with Paul Chryst and he was telling me about some of the walk-on players that are coming aboard, and he sounded as excited about them as some of the signees.

That’s important to me. I know the formula to win here. Every place has a little different formula and it’s based on where you can recruit and the type of players that you have consistent access to.

We’re a program that is going to develop people, and walk-ons have been a lifeline. It’s no secret the success we’ve had with guys like Joe Panos, Jimmy Leonhard, J.J. Watt and Jared Abbrederis.

We’re not a place that’s going to have access to an overabundance of skill players. That’s not to say they can’t be found in the state. Melvin Gordon is a prime example of that. But we will get tough linemen and linebackers and we’ll get physical players and a lot of tight end types.

We’ve always gone out and found players that we thought could fit into our program. We found guys that we could teach — guys that could grow — and we’ve found hundreds of them over the years.

You want someone with a great attitude, someone who’s tough and wants to be here. You can make something out of them because they’re going to get better. That’s what we made a living on.

Our first priority is always to comb the state of Wisconsin and find the good ones, along with making sure we have a nice group of athletic walk-ons. You’re hoping a good portion of them pan out.

One of the first things that Paul did when he got the job was to get on the phone with Dan Brunner, who’s the executive director of the Wisconsin Football Coaches Association. You have to cater to the state high school coaches. They’re the ones who are going to encourage kids to come here. And they’re going to expose their kids to Wisconsin football.

I’m sure Paul will give them total access to his program. He will allow them to come down here and watch practice and visit with our assistants. You need a close working relationship and we’ll have it.

National Signing Day is always exciting for me. But, then again, no head coach has ever gotten up in front of the media and said, “I hate this class.” Recruiting has changed a lot, though.

When I first started, you were on the road to sign these players and there might be as many two or three cars of coaches in front of the kid’s house waiting for him to make up his mind.

I remember all the traveling and going from Ohio into Pennsylvania, and then I would end up in Jersey. It’s not like it used to be. Now you have a dead period leading up to signing day.

The most important thing is still to keep everything in perspective. I think it’s hilarious when people overreact to how many stars are by a player’s name. Not one 5-star started in the Super Bowl.

Don’t get me wrong. You’d like to get some 5-stars, a lot of them are legitimate. You’d like to get some of those guys, and we have. But we never really cared about rankings.

Someone asked me, “When do you know that you’ve got a good recruiting class?” I told them, “When they’re finished with their eligibility.”

I remember how Bret Bielema was really upset because his first recruiting class wasn’t ranked as high as he thought it should have been. All I said was, “We’ll judge it down the road.”

That class wound up having the Outland winner in Gabe Carimi, the Unitas Golden Arm winner in Scott Tolzien, a finalist for the Mackey Award in Lance Kendricks and an All-American in John Moffitt.

That’s why you can’t rush to judgment on a recruiting class. •
The highest of highs to the lowest of lows

Since making the decision to get into the world of covering sports for a living, I have found myself rooting for individuals more than teams. Yes, there are exceptions. Besides the obvious of enjoying a Badgers victory, I also like seeing the Packers do well. It also is encouraging to see the Milwaukee Bucks playing better than most expected.

And, with this part-time gig I have in the spring and summer, it sure is cool when the Brewers are winning.

Having been associated with University of Wisconsin athletics since 1988, one of the joys of the job is seeing so many Badgers playing or coaching at the highest levels. That includes two former UW standouts who will get Super Bowl rings — New England Patriots running back James White and linebacker Jonathan Casillas.

On the other sideline last Sunday in Glendale, Arizona, were Seattle Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson, defensive end O'Brien Schofield and offensive coordinator Darrell Bevell.

Super Bowl XLIX will go down as one of the greatest games in NFL history. Most will remember it for one play. One play from the 1 yard line in the closing seconds of a tight game. Wilson and Bevell will forever be part of the moment.

Since there is a good chance you were one of the 114 million viewers last Sunday, you witnessed the famous — or infamous — play.

Trailing 28-24 and facing a second-and-goal, Wilson’s pass was intercepted by rookie Malcolm Butler. It was a terrific play by the rookie defensive back, but the story has been, and will continue to be, the decision to pass instead of giving the ball to Marshawn Lynch.

Some have called it the worst play call in the history of football. (We don’t get too wound up about this stuff, do we?)

It was difficult to watch. For most of the game, I had no genuine rooting interest. But in the final two minutes, I wanted to see if Wilson and the Seahawks could pull off a game-winning drive.

Give Seattle coach Pete Carroll credit. He took the blame for the play. He also knows that no matter what explanation he gives, it will not be good enough for many.

Such is the price one might pay in the pursuit of greatness.

Think about some of the most memorable plays — or blunders — in the history of sports. Bill Buckner in the 1986 World Series. Chris Webber’s timeout in the title game of the 1993 NCAA basketball tournament. Scott Norwood’s missed field goal at the end of Super Bowl XXV (remember, it was a 47-yard attempt ... not exactly a chip shot).

We are talking about individuals who were among the best in the world at what they do. They played on the biggest stage their sport had to offer. They were part of teams that did not settle for being average.

It is comfortable to be average. These are people who were willing to get out of their comfort zone. The rewards are great, but the risk is extensive.

It is all part of the gig, and everyone involved knows it. It can be what drives them.

It is natural for us to define someone by a single moment. Natural, but probably unwise.

Wilson is in line to get a huge contract from Seattle. He is one of the NFL’s bright young stars.

Bevell is a highly-respected coordinator. A head coaching position could very well be in his future. His high football IQ served him well in helping the Badgers win their first-ever Rose Bowl. He also has a Super Bowl title ring from last season’s run with Seattle.

Agree or disagree with calling a pass play on the 1. Wilson and Bevell are among the best in the world at what they do. Last year at this time they were Super Bowl champions. Today they are trying to move on from bitter disappointment.

Those two are built to handle both ends of the spectrum. That is what Badgers are built to do. •
WHAT DO YOU REMEMBER ABOUT YOUR SIGNING DAY?

JACKI GULCZYNSKI
Senior • W. Basketball

“I woke up on the morning of Signing Day and sat at the kitchen table. My mom gave me a special silver pen with my name on it and I signed that morning. I also had a mock signing at school that day with all of my sports coaches, our athletic director and our principal.”

JOSEPH LABATE
Senior • Men’s Hockey

“It was the last hour of school and it was in a room called the Parlor. The room was the main focal point of (Academy of) Holy Angels from the 1930s so it was a really old and pretty room. They had a big table set up and the school got me a cake. There were a few cameras there from the local newspapers. My coach and my whole family were there and so I signed in front of all my family and friends.”

ANNIE PANKOWSKI
Freshman • W. Hockey

“I was at the North American Hockey Academy in Vermont two years ago with Jenny (Ryan) and we decided that we wanted to skip our English class to sign our letters of intent. We were so excited for Signing Day. It was the two of us signing with Wisconsin and our goalie, Sidney Peters, had committed to Minnesota, our biggest rival.”

Sophomore • Football

“I signed at my high school, in the athletic director’s office early in the morning. My mom and dad and grandparents were all there, and so was my head coach. There were a lot of hugs and good handshakes. I was born and raised here, so coming to Wisconsin was a dream come true. Being able to sign that letter of intent to commit to the University of Wisconsin was a measure of all my hard work paying off.”
Why did you decide to come to Wisconsin from Toronto?
“I was recruited by the former coach, Brian Fleishman, based on my national and international ranking, but when I came on an official visit I knew that I belonged here. UW-Madison has a great athletic and academic reputation and I really wanted to be part of that legacy. I had a gut feeling that Madison was going to be my new home. So I signed my National Letter of Intent, and here I am!”

What was it like at the ITA Championships in Pacific Palisades, California?
“Travelling to California with Coach (Tina) Samara to play the All-American tournament was something I had been looking forward to for a while. I first heard about the tournament when I arrived on campus my freshman year, and had made it one of my goals to be invited to play it. I really believed I could beat girls at that level, and even though I didn’t go as far as I would have liked, it was something I worked hard for and it gave me confidence going into this season.”

Favorite place to play?
“Nielsen Tennis Stadium.”

Favorite place to eat around campus?
“Mia-Za’s. But I also love Café Porta Alba, which is just off campus by Hilldale Mall.”

Best thing about Madison?
“The atmosphere and tremendous support for Badger athletics. I also love the perfect balance between the city life and a college campus.”

Favorite pre-match music?
“I love listening to anything new and upbeat. It ranges from hip-hop to country. I also have a playlist of pre-match music with a lot of Beyoncé, Eminem and Nicki Minaj.”

A native of Toronto, Canada, Lauren Chypyha is in her third year on the Wisconsin women’s tennis team and is off to a 10-4 start this season. Chypyha led the Badgers in wins a year ago with a record of 27-10 en route to All-Big Ten honors. She was also selected to compete in the prestigious Riviera Women’s All-American Tennis Championship in September.
Paul Chryst was hired as the 30th head coach in Wisconsin football history on Dec. 17, 2014. National Signing Day was his 50th day on the job. From a dream coming true to the reality of recruiting, here is a look at those first 50 days, in his own words.

By Paul Chryst
You get into coaching to coach “this team” and those were the guys that were going to be a part of your first team. It was unique because some of the guys that were getting ready to play their last game I had known, and so it was good to see them. I was appreciative of recognizing the fact that it was the end of this year’s season. That was this year’s team, and I had nothing to do with that team, as far as them getting to the Outback Bowl and earning the right to play in that game.

I was glad that was the first thing I was able to do, because I think that’s the essence of what you do, and that’s with your team.

There were a couple moments during that day when you get a chance to just stop and breathe for a second and think about it. There wasn’t one “aha” moment. I think the press conference itself was that moment where it all became real. There were a lot of discussions leading up to that point, a lot of things that came together, and that was a special deal for me.

Walking up on that stage and shaking Coach Alvarez’s hand was big for me. It was different than when we had visited leading up to that day and talked about the job. I think he obviously knew how I was feeling, and I felt good about how he was feeling, that he trusted me to take over this position that obviously means a lot to him, means a lot to me, and means a lot to the fans of Wisconsin. We didn’t talk a lot about it up there or anything, but I did feel that.

I’d say without a doubt the most important thing was having Robin, Katy, JoJo and Danny there, because you don’t do this without them. They’ve been a big part of the whole journey. It certainly was a big day, more so for what it signifies than the actual event of a press conference.

Any time you share a milestone day, and I definitely considered that day to be one, if you can share it with your family and your friends, you’re pretty lucky, right? So that was big. We had a nice reception afterwards in the Kohl Center with some friends that I hadn’t seen in a long time and it was a good moment to be able to catch your breath a little and just talk to some people who had been through things with you.

You go to bed that night, it’s real. It’s changed. We had been talking about the possibility and then you’re having some real discussions leading up to it with family, with players and coaches who I was with at Pitt. That was a whirlwind. One of the nice things about the press conference was the decision had been made on both sides, and now it’s time to go to work.

DEC. 18, 9:48 A.M. · McClain Center

Practice

You wake up, and you’re starting the transition, but you’re not really doing anything. That next day, I got to watch practice. But you don’t want to get in the way because the coaches and players are doing their thing, getting ready to play Auburn and I was very cognizant of that. I got to see Mark Johnson, who stopped by practice that morning. We were neighbors for a number of years, so it was great to visit with Mark.

During that time before the team left for Tampa, I was putting things together, gathering information, trying to figure out when I could hire coaches. I had a chance to visit with some of the coaches that were on the staff currently, and I tried to visit with some other coaches I was considering, but at the same time a lot of other guys are in a world that they had to be doing their jobs still so it was a delicate balance.

The good thing in my mind, was at that point I knew who my coordinators would be. The first thing I did when I got the job was talk with (defensive coordinator) Dave (Aranda) and made it clear I wanted him as a part of the staff. He wanted to stay, so it was important to get that locked up early. I had talked with Rudy (offensive coordinator Joe Rudolph) throughout the whole process, and he knew if I was going to do it, take this job, I wanted to do it with him. And he was on board.

DEC. 23-27 · Pittsburgh

Family Time

I flew back to Pittsburgh on Dec. 23 with the girls (Katy and JoJo). That was the first chance that we as a family had to be together really and turn the phones off, not be distracted and be a family. We got to celebrate Christmas, and also be happy for the decision that was made. Everyone was excited and it was just a good chance just to be together. We knew we would be heading down to Tampa as a family but those couple of days were just us, probably for the last time in a while.
We left Pittsburgh on Dec. 27 and flew to Tampa. As soon as we landed, I headed to practice. I enjoyed going to practices down there just to try to start connecting with the guys. Again, I tried to stay in the background because the focus should be and was on the game. But I made sure they knew I was there if they wanted to come up and chat after practice, or if I saw them at the hotel. It was a good time to start to get to know some guys and reconnect with the ones I already knew.

While I was doing that, I was trying to position it so when the bowl games were done you I could move forward on some of the hiring. I took some time on a couple of different days to meet with the academic folks, also with compliance. I just wanted to make sure that once the bowl game was over, I could go full speed ahead on recruiting and hiring the staff. Get as many questions answered beforehand because I knew it would be a hectic time.

Also throughout that time in Tampa, I was trying to see where the recruits were at. I was able to start reaching out to them a couple days after I was hired. You’re allowed to make one phone call a week to a prospect. So I usually did that in the evenings. You’re introducing yourself to the ones that I didn’t know, and connecting to the ones I did know, seeing where they were at with the whole process.

It was also a good time to interact with the fans while we were down there. I spoke at an alumni function. Went to “Beach Day” and spoke there. And then just in the time around the hotel or going out to eat, seeing all the fans and witnessing the great support, that was energizing.

Obviously the best part was watching the game and seeing the guys come out with the win and seeing how emotional that was for everyone involved. Again, it wasn’t really my deal but I felt great for the seniors and Melvin, to be able to end their careers like that. For the guys coming back, it hopefully serves as a great springboard for 2015.
“I TOLD THEM, ‘WE’RE NOT GOING TO HAVE A LOT OF RULES. YOU GUYS KNOW WHAT’S RIGHT. DO THE RIGHT THING.’ EVERYTHING IS ABOUT BEING THE BEST YOU CAN, AND YOU’VE GOT TO WORK TO DO THAT.”

JAN. 5, 6:37 A.M. - CAMP RANDALL STADIUM
ASSEMBLING A STAFF

We flew back to Pittsburgh the night of the 1st, pretty much right after the game. On Jan. 4, I was back in Madison and that Monday began piecing the staff together. I think I visited with 12 candidates that week. The nice part is that the staff was starting to take shape. But we also interviewed some guys that we knew would be great fits that we couldn’t hire. That’s not fun.

(Special teams coordinator) Chris (Haerring), (defensive line coach) Inoke (Breckterfield) and Rudy came up on the 5th. (Running backs coach) Thomas (Brown) was able to meet with Rudy, which was important. It was important for us to talk to him and for him to talk to us, because it’s a two way street. People may think that interviewing is just us, one sided, kind of evaluating if he’d be a good fit, but I think it goes both ways.

I wanted to have as many guys hired that week because I knew I could devote that week and a half window solely to the staffing. We couldn’t be on the road (recruiting) until Jan. 15. But on the other hand, I wasn’t going to do it at the expense of rushing it just to say we had a guy on board. Every day, in our staff meetings, it seemed we would add another chair or two. That was important, to all get on the same page, because once it came time to be one the road, things would be moving pretty fast.

We were able to announce the majority of the staff on Tuesday and Wednesday before going out on the road. (Outside linebackers coach) Tim (Tibesar) and (defensive backs coach) Daronte’ (Jones) were also in the mix but we had to wait until the following week until they were official. So it felt good to have most of the pieces in place as we prepared to head out.

JAN. 20, 7:58 A.M. - McCLAIN CENTER

THE START OF A NEW SEASON

Those first two days (Jan. 15-16) I was able to get around the state and visit a bunch of schools. We were probably in seven or eight schools, over towards the Milwaukee area, then south towards the Illinois border then back up north.

On Friday, Robin flew in for the weekend so we got to spend Saturday and Sunday together. Did a little house hunting. I also met with some candidates to try and fill out the rest of the staff and then get squared away for the next week because school was starting and it was a big week for us to be on the road.

Monday, we were back on the road in-state, me, Chris and Rudy. We went and saw Alec Ingold and Jake Whalen. Alec was someone we were recruiting at Pitt, so we had a relationship. We saw him at school and then met with his parents at their house. We had a good visit with Jake and his parents at their house. That ended up being a pretty fruitful day for us.

The next day was the first day of class, so we had a team meeting at 8 a.m. There are a lot of things you need to go over at the start of any season, and maybe more so when there’s a change in staff. But you also don’t need to overwhelm them. It’s really day one of a long journey together.

Obviously you hope they had a good break. It’s important that they have that time with their families away from school and football and take advantage of that. I had a chance to congratulate them on the bowl game. I spoke to them about it being the start of a new semester. The academic folks met with them to make sure they had everything covered. Then I introduced (strength coach) Ross (Kolodziej) and he laid out the schedule and expectations for the weight room.

It was the first time we got together as that group. Most of the assistants were on the road and we’ll obviously add some kids to this team, but the bulk of your team is right there for the first time. They’re starting to hear what your expectations are. I told them “We’re not going to have a lot of rules. You guys know what’s right. Do the right thing.” Everything is about being the best you can, and you’ve got to work to do that. It was a 45-minute meeting and great to be in front of them for the first time.

JAN. 20, 1:45 P.M.
DANE COUNTY AIRPORT
THE LONG AND WINDING ROAD

After the team meeting I boarded a plane and headed to New Jersey with Nokes (Inoke Breckterfield). On Wednesday morning it was off to St. Louis to meet up with (tight ends coach) Mickey (Turner), Dave and Tim. That night me and Nokes flew to California, leaving around 9:30 p.m. and getting to our hotel around 11:30 p.m.

All the travel leaves you a little gassed but we got to eat at Rubio’s and In-and-Out so we were fired up. There was a UW grad at Rubio’s that came up to us and got some pictures. That was pretty cool. We went and saw Olive (Sagapolu) in school and met with his mom and grandparents. Then met with Kevin (Estes) at his house with his parents. And then we got on a plane that night again and headed to Ypsilanti, Michigan to see David (Moorman). We left San Diego at 9:30 p.m. and arrived in Michigan at 5 a.m. We met with his family and had a pretty nice breakfast.

On Friday, we were back in Madison getting ready to host some official visits. Alec came in. So did Kraig Howe, who we’d been recruiting at Pitt, and Arrington Farrar. We went to the hock-
The Kohl Center is awesome and it’s always fun to sit in and among the Badgers fans. It was just like I remembered it. Loud, passionate. I got to shake some hands, take some pictures with folks and most importantly, expose our kids to the type of atmosphere that is common around here.

JAN. 25, 12:15 P.M. • GREEN BAY

WFCA ALL-STATE BANQUET

On Sunday, Chris and I drove up to the WFCA All-State Banquet in Green Bay. It’s important to me to connect with the coaches and players in the state. We’re the state university, the only one that plays Division I football and we need to support football in the state. I’ve already met with the coaches about their clinic they hold in Madison. The All-State Banquet is a terrific event and I thought it was important for me to go up there.

Inoke, Dave, the defensive staff, Daronte’ and Tim picked me up in Green Bay and we flew to Florida, did a home visit, then we got back on a plane and flew down to another part of Florida, and then we visited schools and did a home visit.

The next morning Tim and I flew to Atlanta and met Thomas, where we met Arrington Farrar at school. Later in the day, during a home visit with another kid, we actually had the same meeting time scheduled as Nebraska, so I got to see Mike (Riley). That was pretty strange, but good to see him. Usually you will run into different coaches when you’re doing school visits but usually never during a home visit.

Then Thomas and I flew the next day (Jan. 28) to Dallas and visited with Chris Orr’s dad, then we went to Chris’ school, and he took me around, took me on to the field, then took me through the school and met with his coaches and teachers and administrators that he wanted me to meet. He’s a pretty neat kid that way. And then we went and saw Jordan Stevenson.

JAN. 28, 7:15 P.M. • MADISON

A NEW HOME

I flew back to Madison on Wednesday night and actually moved out of Hotel Red, where I’d been staying — even though I really didn’t spend many nights there — and into my mom’s condo in Madison. It’s nice being out of a hotel, and definitely great seeing my mom. But I can’t say I’ve spent a ton of time there, either.

Wednesday and Thursday we had a couple official visits. On Thursday, I went over to basketball practice to see Bo. That was the first time I got to see him since it became official. We talked over the phone a bunch of times but our schedules just didn’t match up. So it was nice to get over there and see him and chat for a bit. He was great with the recruit.

Thursday night, I picked up Rudy in Milwaukee and we drove down to Chicago. We visited some kids there, drove back up to Milwaukee, back to Madison to finish up an official visit, then back to Milwaukee to watch a basketball game. Saturday we had a bunch of visits and Sunday we actually opened up the Buckingham Club seats in the stadium and watched the Super Bowl with about 40 of the guys from the current team, guys who didn’t have any other place to watch so we all got together. That was fun because it had nothing to do with school, football; just a bunch of guys sitting around watching football.

FEB. 4 • CAMP RANDALL STADIUM

ONE JOURNEY ENDS, ANOTHER BEGINS

Monday’s staff meeting was a good one because now the staff is really starting to come together with guys like Jonny (Jon Budmayr), Ethan (Armstrong), Billy Nagy. We’re filling up the room now.

This week is energizing because you’re adding to your team. Wednesday will be fun, talking to all the kids as they make it official. It’s an important decision for them and their families and it’s fun to hear the excitement in their voices.

We’ll do all our stuff here with the press conference and interviews and Wednesday night have our Mendota meeting. Thursday we’re in Milwaukee for Mendota. Friday I’m flying back to Pittsburgh to see the kids quick, but then I have to fly to Chicago for Big Ten meetings Sunday and Monday. Tuesday it’s off to Florida for a donor event then back to Madison.

So while signing day is sort of the end of it for one cycle, it really never ends. There’s five weeks to spring ball. We’ve already started working on the Class of 2016. Those are the two priorities moving forward. Getting our plan ready for spring ball and recruiting for next year.

I feel I’m truly settled in now. The feeling and the reality of being the head coach at the University of Wisconsin keeps evolving. When you go in as a head coach into a recruit’s home, you are more so than when you talked at that team meeting, you are more so than when you were an observer at practice. You feel it more so when you get the whole staff together. It gets more real the first time you get to be at the workout with them.

Each time you add someone, or have a different experience, it’s energizing. There’s chaos, but the chaos can be fun.
YOUNG QUARTERBACKS AUSTIN KAFENTZIS AND ALEX HORNIBROOK HAD VERY DIFFERENT TIMELINES WHEN IT CAME TO MATCHING UP WITH MADISON, BUT BOTH RECRUITING EXPERIENCES LED TO THE SAME CONCLUSION — THAT WISCONSIN IS EXACTLY WHERE THEY WANT TO BE.

BROTHERS IN ARMS

BY MIKE LUCAS • UWBADGERS.COM
Austin Kafentzis and Alex Hornibrook each endured a couple of weeks of uncertainty when they were in recruiting limbo. But their career paths have since intersected as Wisconsin freshmen; bridging their recognizable differences, physically and geographically, as early enrollees in the Class of 2015.

Kafentzis is a 6-foot, 200-pound quarterback from Sandy, Utah, a Salt Lake City suburb; whereas Hornibrook is a 6-foot-4, 215-pound quarterback from West Chester, Pennsylvania, 25 miles west of Philadelphia. While so unalike — Kafentzis is right-handed and Hornibrook is left-handed — they have so many common likes.

Both like school, especially the idea of getting a degree from the UW School of Business. Both like Drew Brees and Peyton Manning. Both like competition. Both like Paul Chryst. And the latter is a big reason why they’re both here, and it’s based on their trust and belief in Chryst, the UW head coach.

Kafentzis, who will be 19 in April, said that his commitment to graduate early from high school and enroll for the second semester was made all the more easier knowing that it would allow him to “start learning from one of the best offensive minds in college football today, Coach Chryst.”

Hornibrook, who just turned 18, said essentially the same thing after decommitting from the University of Pittsburgh — where Chryst coached the last three seasons — and following Chryst to Madison because “I thought his pro-style offense was great for me; I thought it was the perfect fit.”

Despite being a long way from home, Kafentzis and Hornibrook are both confident that they will have no trouble “fitting in” with the Chryst system, the school, their new teammates, the coaching staff, the campus and the community. Yet, they have very different stories to tell.

“I’m just looking forward to working with both of them this spring,” Chryst said.

After attending a Wisconsin summer football camp, Kafentzis verbally committed to the Badgers in June of 2013; he accepted Gary Andersen’s scholarship offer two months before the start of his junior year of high school and two months before Andersen, who had replaced Bret Bielema, made his debut as the head coach against UMass. Kafentzis was the first member of the 2015 class.

“I shut down recruiting and I didn’t look into any other colleges or take any other visits; this was my place,” said Kafentzis, who led the Jordan High Beediggers to the Class 5A state championship as a sophomore. “I wanted to commit (to a college) a little earlier than normal and not wait until my senior year because I wanted to focus on my football and on just getting better and improving my game.”

There was a previous Kafentzis connection to Andersen in that Austin’s father, Kyle, then the defensive coordinator at Sandy High School, had previously coached Andersen’s son, Kegan. During his playing days, Kyle Kafentzis was a defensive back at the University of Hawaii and had a brief trial as a free agent with the Chicago Bears before an injury ended his career.

The recruitment of Austin Kafentzis continued long after he said “yes” to Andersen and the Badgers. Others tried to get him to flip but he remained steadfast in his commitment. “How could you not come to Madison and just love everything about it?” he posed. “It was the people, the university, Camp Randall, the fans; just everything about it. I didn’t need to take any other visits.”

Until, that is, Andersen left Wisconsin for Oregon State. “It was ironic that he ended up leaving and I had to go through the (recruiting) process which I tried not to do (by committing early),” Kafentzis said. “It was a big decision on where I wanted to go and I had two weeks to figure it out as opposed to the two years that I would have had prior.”

Kafentzis felt obligated to visit Oregon State. “His first day there,” he said of Andersen, “was my first day there. So he was seeing it (the campus and facilities) as I was seeing it. He hadn’t seen it at all, either. We were kind of going through it together. I already had two years to basically fall in love with Madison and I did. And I’m a really loyal guy when it comes to commitment.

“I love Gary, I love him to death,” Kafentzis stressed. “He’s the reason why I’m here right now and I wish him the best at Oregon State. But in the end I feel what was best for me was staying at Wisconsin and learning under Coach Chryst.”

Kafentzis did his homework on Chryst, too. “I didn’t really know much about him because I didn’t think I had to; he wasn’t here at the beginning,” he recounted. “They said they were going to honor our scholarships regardless. As a quarterback, and I believe I am a quarterback, I had to look into everything. And his offenses were super explosive, especially with Russell Wilson. I liked everything about Coach Chryst and what he had to bring to the table.”
Chryst also did his homework on Kafentzis. “When you watched his film, you saw a guy that competed,” Chryst said. “He made throws; he did a lot with his legs. But, again, the thing that stood out the most was the way he competed. I certainly felt that he had quite a few redeeming qualities. Then in talking to him, I thought, ‘Here’s a guy who will work and wants to be good at this level.’”

More than anything, Kafentzis wants to be a quarterback. Many recruiters projected him on defense as a safety. Andersen, in fact, thought that’s where he might wind up. So when he visited with Chryst, it was one of the first things that came up. “He believed I was a quarterback and he thinks I’m a quarterback at the highest level,” Kafentzis said, “and I ultimately based my decision off that answer.”

Chryst was just being himself, just being honest. “I knew that was going to be important to him, so we talked about it,” he said. “I don’t believe that it’s right to bring someone in for a position when you know that you’re going to try and move him. I’ve been a part of guys who have changed positions, some really good ones here. But that’s not the intention with Austin. He’s got the ability to be a good quarterback and I told him that he would have every opportunity to do that.”

Because of his running prowess — 6,942 rushing yards, which included 38 games of 100-yard-plus yards during his illustrious four-year high school career — Kafentzis has been branded as a dual-threat quarterback; and there’s nothing wrong with that brand, particularly when you are the most prolific dual-threat in U.S. prep history with 115 passing touchdowns and 103 rushing touchdowns.

“I do believe I can run the ball,” Kafentzis said. “But I’m a pass-first guy. When I’m going through my progressions — first read, second read — if that all breaks down, I’m going to use my footwork, backdoor or frontdoor (out of the pocket... et). But I’m using it find the open guy. I wouldn’t say I’m one read and sprint out. I wouldn’t say I was a dual-threat quarterback. A lot of my rushing yards were called rushes. I feel like I’m more of a pocket passer who uses his footwork.”

Kafentzis has strengthened his arm by throwing the javelin; he’s not just any thrower, mind-you, but he’s a Utah record-holder and state champion in the javelin.

“It has not hurt me; if anything, it has helped my arm get stronger,” said Kafentzis, who wouldn’t mind going out for the UW track team after spring ball if it can be arranged. “I’m not going to say it’s the same as throwing a football. The release points and starting points are different. But if you keep your elbow above your shoulder, you’re not going to have any (arm) problems. My dad and uncles threw it (the javelin), so it’s in my blood.”

Before Kafentzis knew of Chryst, he knew of Wilson. He knew that Wilson was a 5-11 quarterback whose height was questioned, especially by the NFL scouts. “I feel like the only thing you can’t control is height,” said Kafentzis. “I’m not as tall (as some other QBs) but I have the footwork to keep the play alive and get into passing windows and deliver the ball downfield. Drew Brees is in the same boat. He’s not the tallest quarterback. But he’s getting the job done at the highest level.”

Kafentzis has tried to take different elements from a variety of quarterbacks. He respects Aaron Rodgers “for his arm strength and ability to have a quick release.” He admires Tom Brady for his “pocket presence” and Peyton Manning for his “brain.” The mental part of the game is very important to Kafentzis. “He knows your defense,” he said of Manning, “better than you know your defense.”

Kafentzis shares that trait with Hornibrook. Both are excellent students in the classroom. Both are avid students of the game. And both have credited Joel Stave, UW’s returning starter at quarterback, with easing their transition to college life and football. “Joel has been a great role model,” Kafentzis said. “He has helped us every step of the way. He has been a great mentor.”

Kafentzis is living with tight end Kyle Penniston and linebackers Nick Thomas and Ty DeForest. Penniston is from California, Thomas is from Florida (via Kansas), DeForest is from Marshall. Hornibrook is on the floor below them and living with defensive back Serge Trezy and offensive lineman Jon Dietzen. Trezy is from Eastern Arizona (via Florida) and Dietzen is from Black Creek and Seymour High School.

“We’re all blending really well,” Kafentzis said. “We’re excited to see how our future is.”

Kafentzis credited QB Joel Stave with easing his transition to college life and football. “Joel has been a great role model,” he said. “He has helped us every step of the way. He has been a great mentor.”
Up until a few weeks ago, Hornibrook wasn’t sure his future would be here. “There was a week or two where I didn’t know if I was going to get offered (by Wisconsin) or not,” he said. “Through the whole process, I wasn’t too anxious or overwhelmed or anything like that. I was confident in what was going to happen. And once I actually did get an offer from Coach Chryst, I was excited to get started. It happened real fast. I visited on Sunday and moved in Monday.”

On June 7, 2014, Hornibrook hit send on Twitter and delivered this tweet: “Very excited and humbled to announce that I have committed to play football at the University of Pittsburgh.”

Hornibrook was recruited by Pitt’s offensive line coach Jim Hueber, a former UW assistant. He also had offers from Rutgers and UConn.

“I actually wanted to go far away from home from the beginning,” said Hornibrook, a record-setting passer at Malvern Prep. “But my ideas changed once I got offers from the local schools. When I picked Pitt, I was very comfortable with the school and I would have gone there even if it wasn’t for football. But when I got the opportunity here, I couldn’t pass it up.”

While at Pitt, Chryst had a good book on Hornibrook, a three-year captain. “I was able to go through the whole process with him,” he said. “He came to our (summer) camp and he came to campus quite a bit, which really allows you to sit down and visit and get to know him. I think he has some special talent and when you spend some time with him, he has the makeup that you want in a quarterback.”

When Chryst informed Hornibrook that he was taking the Wisconsin job, Chryst said, “He (Hornibrook) brought up the possibility whether there would be any interest in him (coming to Wisconsin) and I said, ‘Absolutely,’ because I knew this place would fit him as well (as Pitt). I’m really excited and feel fortunate that he’s here. He has got a lot of arm strength and throws a lot of different type of throws. He has got good mobility to go along with his size, so you feel pretty good about him.”

Maybe nobody felt better about Hornibrook’s decision to become a Badger than one of his uncles who played for UW basketball coach Bo Ryan at Sun Valley High School in Aston, Pennsylvania. On top of that, Ryan’s late father, Butch, coached another of Hornibrook’s uncles,
Ben Davis, who played seven years in the Major Leagues with the San Diego Padres, the Seattle Mariners and the Chicago White Sox. Davis, the second overall pick in the 1995 draft, got some notoriety in 2001 when he broke up Curt Schilling’s perfect game with a bunt single in the eighth inning; it was 2-0 at the time.

“He’s definitely one of my closet uncles; he lives about five minutes away and I see him all the time,” Hornibrook said of Davis, a 16-year vet of pro ball. “He has just been a great influence on me because he has already been where I want to be (as an athlete). He went to the same high school and he has had a lot of success in sports. He has been a great role model.”

Hornibrook feels the same way about his parents: his mom Dawn played basketball at Gettysburg; his dad Jeff played football at Temple. Meanwhile, his older sister Mackenzie is a swimmer at Penn State and his younger brother Jake will “probably be a lot bigger than me.” On opting for Wisconsin over Pitt, he said, “It was kind of a family decision and we felt this was what was right.”

For awhile, the Hornibrook home base was Austin, Texas. Business took Jeff Hornibrook there. “And I would have gone to the same high school as Drew Brees, if we had stayed, the same school as Nick Foles,” said Alex Hornibrook, who lists Brees and Peyton Manning among his favorite quarterbacks. Hornibrook, like Kafentzis, pointed to the way that Manning can manage a game. “He knows where he want to go with the ball, he’s making checks all the time and he gets all of his guys in the right place.”

Right place, right time. That’s how Hornibrook would characterize why he’s in Madison today.

As for the competition for playing time, whenever it may materialize down the road, not only for Hornibrook but Kafentzis, he said, “I know there are a lot of quarterbacks here. But at the end of the day you’re going to have to compete anywhere you go. So you might as well go to a place where you’re comfortable and you feel like you can succeed.”

Both have succeeded in doing that; the first step.

Wisconsin is off to one of the greatest starts in school history — the second-greatest to be exact — and there are many reasons why. Perhaps the biggest, and most consistent, trademark of Bo Ryan’s program over the last 14 seasons is that the Badgers simply do not beat themselves.

Wisconsin has figured out that decreasing the opponents’ margin for error is a tried and true recipe for success. To that end, the Badgers have nearly perfected it this season.

“Bo Ryan teaches what you need to do to win, but he also helps his team eliminate the things that cause you to lose,” ESPN’s Jay Bilas said recently. “They don’t foul, they don’t have their opponent shoot a lot of free throws and they don’t turn the ball over.”

To support Bilas’ contention, Wisconsin leads the nation in all three of those vital categories. UW turns the ball over just 7.6 times per game, commits a mere 13.3 fouls per contest and surrenders an average of just 12.5 opponent free throw attempts per game.

This is not by accident. If you’ve ever observed a Wisconsin practice, fundamentals and precision are demanded at all times.

Go ahead and add junior guard Nicole Bauman to the list of those Wisconsin basketball greats. Better yet, move her all the way to the top because the New Berlin, Wisconsin, native set a single-game school record for 3-pointers last week that is tops among both men and women at UW.

In a career-high performance against Ohio State on Thursday night, Bauman scored 31 points and set the school record by cashing eight 3-pointers, breaking the Kohl Center men’s and women’s records in the process.

“It’s crazy and interesting to think about,” Bauman said. “After the game everyone was saying ‘Congratulations’ and I was like ‘Well we just lost so I’m not that excited right now,’ but it’s pretty cool. I actually had no idea.

“I was just on and I wasn’t thinking about anything like that at all. I was too into the game I guess. Maybe after the fifth one, I was kind of like, ‘OK, I’m feeling it tonight.’”

She was definitely feeling it. Bauman ended the game shoot-
Badgers starting to find their offense
Quick starts, goal scoring increasing for UW

A season-best nine-goal weekend and three games with at least four goals in their last four outings shows progress. A power play that went 3-for-8 last weekend and that is 12-for-56 in its last 15 games after a 1-for-29 start to the season, shows progress. For the Badgers, there is much more work to be done.

Wisconsin got first career goals from freshman forwards Ryan Wagner and Cameron Hughes last Saturday against Minnesota. Freshman forward Matt Ustaski had a goal and two assists last Friday for his first career multi-point effort. Freshman defenseman Jack Dougherty scored his second career goal last Friday at Minnesota.

A goal nine seconds into the game last Saturday tied the school record for fastest score to start a game.

Wisconsin has six first-period goals in the last four games after scoring just two first-period goals in the first 18 games. The Badgers scored the first goal of the game in three of the last four contests and five of the last nine after doing so just three times in the first 13 games.

Progress.
Before the No. 3 Badgers hit the ice on Saturday against No. 7 Minnesota Duluth, they will take time to recognize the outstanding senior class of Brittany Ammerman, Katy Josephs, Karley Sylvester, Blayre Turnbull and Katarina Zgraja.

The group has played a huge role in Wisconsin’s success this season, as the quintet ranks second in the nation among senior classes in scoring, averaging 3.82 points per contest.

Wisconsin’s senior class is a tight-knit group, which began as a class of four until Ammerman joined the group after redshirting the 2012-13 season.

“We’ve always been a pretty small class,” Sylvester said. “We started with four and added Brit (Ammerman) last year and it’s been awesome just having that small class, and we’ve always been really close. I’ve been able to talk to any one of them personally, about academics, home life, hockey life.

“Throughout the years we’ve grown together and been able to do this process together so I think that’s what makes us so close.”

“We’ve been developing together for all these years, and it’s been quite the journey,” Zgraja said. “We’ve had many ups and Badgers set for senior send-off vs. Rutgers

UW’s seven-man senior class will be honored

The No. 18-ranked Badgers (8-2 overall, 6-1 Big Ten) return home for their final home dual meet of the season Friday when Wisconsin hosts league newcomer Rutgers in a 7 p.m. bout in the UW Field House.

The Badgers are coming off of a week in which they split in conference action, dropping their first Big Ten decision of the season at Michigan before rebounding with a 34-6 victory at Michigan State.

Wisconsin is 3-0 in home duals this season and 5-2 on the road.

Minnesota is 6-0-0 in conference duals and leads the Big Ten, with Iowa (5-0-0) also undefeated in league competition. Eleven of 14 teams in the conference appear in the top 25 of the USA Today/NWCA Division I Coaches Poll.

The Badgers’ last home dual also serves as Senior Night, with Wisconsin’s senior class set to be recognized in a pre-match ceremony. Three of Wisconsin’s starters, Timmy McCall, Frank Cousins and Matt Cavallaris, will be recognized among the seven graduating seniors. Kalvin York, Dylan Iczkowski, Ben Cox and Alex Yde round out the senior class that will be celebrated

The Badgers, who are coming off their third-straight NCAA tournament appearance after finishing the season with a 36-20 record and a 15-7 mark in Big Ten play, open their season at the Kajikawa Tournament this Friday through Sunday in Tempe, Arizona.

Wisconsin will face six teams that advanced to the 2014 NCAA Tournament during the 2015 season, with home games against Green Bay, Minnesota and Nebraska highlighting the Badgers schedule.

UW will face four teams that are ranked in preseason polls a total of seven times this season, including a clash with No. 2 Oregon. The Badgers last met the Ducks in the 2014 NCAA Tournament, when UW fell 6-0 to top-ranked Oregon (52-7-1) in the Eugene Regional championship game.

Minnesota checks in at No. 15 in both the USA Today/NFCA and ESPN.com/USA Softball preseason polls, while Nebraska stands at No. 18/20 and DePaul comes in at No. 25/NR. UW received votes (16/26) in both polls.

“This is certainly going to be a new year for Badger softball,” said UW head coach Yvette Healy, who is entering her fifth year at the helm of the program. “Looking ahead, we have seven games against teams ranked in the preseason top 25 and almost 20 games against 2014 NCAA Tournament teams.”

Playing their most difficult schedule in school history, the Badgers posted a 6-14 record against ranked teams in 2014 and tied with the 1997 UW squad for the most wins against top-25 opponents. The team’s success against the best teams in the country in 2014 was pinpointed by a 7-5 win against then-No. 7 Arizona on March 7 and two wins against then-No. 7 Michigan in Ann Arbor on May 2 and 4.

“The past two seasons have been so special, posting back-to-back NCAA regional championship game appearances and finishing ranked in the top 25,” Healy said.

The Badgers return 13 letterwinners and welcome five newcomers to the program. UW also welcomes a new assistant coach, Missy Beseres Dow, who was the head coach at Loyola Chicago for four years and collected 105 victories while leading the Ramblers to a pair of Horizon League titles.

The season will present many challenges for the Badgers, as they will adjust to a lineup that lost four seniors who went down in the UW record books as the most winningest class in school history.

“We graduated four all-region seniors, who each contributed so much to our recent success,” Healy said. “As we work to help our newest leaders emerge, our focus has been on competing with character. Our weekly chalk talks this fall featured how we can approach the challenge with passion and integrity.”
